December With the words "J. & T. Warrin, account of." This is in the hand writing of a cierk of the Adverse. Another book produced is the sales seek. In this is the advertisement, the bids and lames of purchasers. The following is the entry as to this purchase: 52—51 Chs McQuade, 2 x 190—380. Nothing in this book indicates the name of the seller. The terms of sale do not contain the mame of the vender, nor of the auctioneer. The memorandum at the foot of the terms, signed by the plaintiff, states the purchase to be made of Nicolay, metioneer. But the receipt for the deposit of ten per cent, designates the lots by their numbers, expresses the purchase memey, and states that "the little is to be given by J. Warrin and others." This signed "Albert H. Nicolay, auctioneer, by McLoughlin." He is proved to have been a cierk, but was not present at the sale. It is clear that under the case of Champlin vs. Parish, 11, page 405, there is nothing to bind the defendant, unless to be the receipt. A subscription by the agent to a paper, showing who is the principal, is at least indepensable. And in Pinckaey ws. Hagerdorn (1 Duer's Rep.) in this Court, such a accument was in evidence. The entry in the sales book was subscribed by the auctioneer, and did sufficiently show who was the vender, as the Court determined. And in the late case of Peck vs. Murray Justice Mitchell, of the Supreme Court, recognized and enforced the rule in a very full and careful spinion. The question then turns upon the receipt signed by the clerk of the auctioneer. The case of Graham vs. Musson, (5 King U. C. 603.) which is cited, does not decide the question, nor that of Hocks vs. Wetmore, (2 Wendell, 548.) The latter depends upon the particular language of the statute, as to the power of an auctioneer on a sale of goods. In Weld vs. Boulter & Barn & Adel, 443, especially in the opinion of Taunton, Justice, there is much to sustain the general proposition that the latter, and there was in the case a soficient recognition of the earls in authority.
